1. INTRODUCTION Background Research

So that a village can develop. So, a cooperative was formed to build and develop the potential and abilities of its members in particular and society in general. Within a cooperativether are various kinds of businesses according to the needs of the community which will be managed later. In general, cooperatives can be interpreted as business entities owned and managed by their members. And also, cooperatives are one form of implementing Pancasila in the economic field. According to Law number 17 of 2012 concerning Cooperatives, it can be interpreted as an association of people or business entities that have the same goal, namely achieving economic prosperity based on the principle of kinship (ombo, 2019) Cooperatives also consist of several types, according to article 16 of Law No. 25 of 1992 explaining that types of cooperatives are based on the similarities and economic interests of their members. The types of cooperatives include consumer cooperatives, producer cooperatives, savings and credit cooperatives, marketing cooperatives, and service cooperatives. In this paper we will discuss savings and loan cooperatives. Consumer Cooperative. This cooperative is intended for consumers of goods and services. Usually, they sell various daily needs such as groceries or stationery so that at first glance it looks like an ordinary shop. The difference is, the profit earned from the sale will be shared among its members. A savings and loan cooperative are a cooperative whose business activities collect and distribute funds to its members at low interest. A savings and loan cooperative are a non- bank financial institution with business activities accepting deposits and providing loans to its members.

2. Lack of self-discipline awareness.
   Lack of awareness of self-discipline in employees will make employee performance decrease in working for the company, this is an indication of a lack of self-discipline among employees in following the rules of the established cooperative.

3. Inaccuracy of employees in completing work
   Employees cannot complete work on time. However, the work that is done does take a long time and is difficult to do and cannot ensure that it is always on time for the job.

Biofloc Cultivation System

Biofloc technology is a technology that uses bacteria, both heterotrophs and autotrophs. These bacteria can convert organic waste intensively into a collection of microorganisms in the form of flocs. The floc formed is utilized by fish as a food source. In the floc there are organisms in the form of planktonic bacteria, fungi, algae and suspended particles that affect the structure and nutritional content of the biofloc. Bacteria are the dominant microorganisms in floc formation (Avnimelech, 2012).
